1. The Quartermaster School in Sombor trains officers and non-commissioned officers for supervisory and specialized positions in the supplies branch of Yugoslav industries.
2. The duration of the course is two years. Apart from the customary subjects such as political indoctrination and history covering the national war of liberation, other subjects taught include mathematics, physics, chemistry, and technology. Students become acquainted with the structure and function of industrial machinery, conduct laboratory tests, and learn methods to calculate the output and to establish norms. Instructors in trade and technical subjects are civilians, while politics, history, geography, and similar subjects are taught by officers. Students attending the course are attached to one of two battalions.
